COURT ROOM, FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 2.—Deathly pale, but with a defiant gleam in his deep sunken blue eyes, Bruno Richard Hauptmann was placed on trial here today charged with the murder of the kidnapped Lindbergh baby.

He was brought to the bar of justice at 10.09 a. m., in a setting without parallel in an American court room in the past two decades.

A galaxy of correspondents, including some of the most famous journalists and writers in the country, were jammed into the press seats in the quaint, century-old court room.

Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard in a flowing black robe, mounted the bench shortly after 10 o'clock. He is a tall, fine-looking man with gray hair, florid face, and wears spectacles. Everybody in the court room rose as the Judge entered from the chamber in the rear of the room and walked up onto the bench.

After the spectators had seated themselves, Hauptmann was brought in from the jail just back of the Court House.

A battery of reporters and writers will record his every move and flash and bulletin the testimony of witnesses for and against him to the four corners of the universe.

There is no actor, living or dead, who would not feel a tendency to flinch in a spot such as this. But everyone who has observed Hauptmann in jail or elsewhere believes not for a moment he will quake as he shuffles into the center of the stage in this highly publicized and exciting melodrama.

This aloof, furtive looking man figures to go in there looking as calm and collected as any person in the house. He knows his fate is at stake and if he is convicted he must die in the electric chair, and understanding this fully, Hauptmann is prepared to stage a fight to the last ditch against the battle plans of the state to prove that he was the man who, all alone, conceived and executed the crime which shocked the world.

In the court room throughout the trial will be a man who will attract almost as much attention as Hauptmann. He is the slain baby's father, Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, who

Rep. Tingham, Mass., Claims
Russia is Trying to Undermine United States

GIVES HIS REASONS

By Eric Friedhelm

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—(INS)—Charging Russia with "attempting to undermine the American Government," Rep. Tingham (R.) of Massachusetts, today demanded that President Roosevelt terminate diplomatic recognition of the Soviet Regime.

Tinkham characterized the Soviet administration as "homicidal terrorists" and said he will introduce a resolution in the House insisting upon immediate withdrawal of Russian recognition.

"The union of Soviet Socialist Republics is controlled by homicidal terrorists who for political reasons have murdered or systematically starved between ten and twenty millions of human beings and who continue to murder and to starve," asserted Tinkham. "Such ferocious barbarism should be condemned and not encouraged by the United States."

"These homicidal terrorists have adopted a militant and systematic teaching of Atheism which is stench in the nostrils of all Christian people."

"The Soviets proclaim doctrines opposed to our constitution and aimed at the destruction of the character of our civilian, which doctrines are systematically spread in the United States by propaganda."

The United States recognition of this rule of terrorists encourages them to talk of war and to make provocative and warlike action in the Far East," Tinkham continued. "The withdrawal of recognition would keep American credit and American money from being used to strengthen this uncivilized, savage and brutal power for war."

Tinkham added that the Russian Communist doctrines have been officially denounced by American military and naval officers as undermining the personnel of the nation's defense forces.

PRESIDENT'S SON INJURES MAN

Radnor, Jan. 2.—Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., a holiday guest here at the home of his Harvard room mate, A. J. Drexel Paul, drove his automobile into a parked car, injuring a man, early New Year's morning, police revealed today. Roosevelt's car crashed into the automobile of Edward Newman, 29 year old gasoline station manager as the owner was about to enter the machine on a road near here. Hurled from the running board, Newman suffered injuries to his head. After requesting that police give no publicity to the accident as he did not want to worry his parents, the President's son was released on his own recognizance. Held for further hearing last night before Justice of the Peace Howard Harvison of Radnor, Roosevelt explained that he was driving directly behind another car and had not seen the parked machine in time to avoid the accident.

MOBILIZATION OF CONGRESS COMPLETED

By George R. Holmes

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

Washington, D. C., Jan. 2.—Mobilization of the new 74th Congress was completed in Washington today as President Roosevelt strove to finish his annual message on the state of the nation and to perfect a national budget that may call for record peace-time spending.

The Congress that convenes at noon tomorrow is newer, in a literal sense, than any of its predecessors, for in the House, almost one fourth of the membership will be taking the oath of office for the first time and the Senate will be sprinkled with many new faces, all as a result of the Democratic landslide in November.

Under these circumstances, the test of Democratic leadership: how to control an unwieldy majority in both houses, becomes severe. There are predictions that the session will see more battling, mostly over economic issues than ever before. There seems ample justification for these predictions despite the surface confidence of the Democratic leaders that they will be able to hold things in check.

Little time is to be lost in the preliminaries. The Republicans have already ironed out their leadership problems with the selection of Senator McNary of Oregon as the Senate leader and the retention of Representative Snell of New York as House leader.

With the Democrats however it is another—and important matter. Senator Robinson, of Arkansas remains Democratic leader in the Senate but there is a lively and sectionally, somewhat bitter fight over the House leadership with Representative Bankhead of Alabama appearing to have slightly the best of it.

NO SPINSTERS

Like the Aztecs and Amazons, the "old maids" are a vanished race. A literary searching party sent into the field for the latter by one of the woman's magazines found some evidences that they once existed and traced some legends that have been handed down from generation to generation.

There are still unmarried ladies of past marrying age, but they are no longer spoken of as spinsters, contemplated sadly, made the brunt of derisive wit, nor found to conceal their state as something disgraceful and unblest.

Time was when the unmarried woman over 30 kept very quiet about her "single blessedness." Now she proclaims it aloud and aloft. Of old it was hurt pride that made old maids profess preference for their lonely existence. Today many women are sincere in protestations of that sort.

A number of things have wrought this social revolution. Emancipation of womanhood contributed. Industrial independence and virtual equality between the sexes in business helped remove the old-maid stigma. The changed economic order which placed millions of women in a better position to support a husband than millions of men are in to support a wife added fuel to the feminist's fire.

Sentimentalists who weep for the old and decry the new will concede, at least, that abolition of the bondage of spinsterhood was a humanitarian stroke.

DUTY OF SOCIETY

In the early history of this country—in fact, up to within two generations—parents appeared to feel a real responsibility for the discipline and conduct of their children. Many modern parents seem to hold to the belief that the schools and society should take from them the obligation of child training.

Many children lack at home the discipline and training that is necessary for the building of stable character, and if they are not taught helpful precepts for their early years by the schools and the churches, they are left to acquire the usually harmful knowledge that is picked up on the street.

Today the responsibility for the training of the youth seems to have been placed upon society, thereby making it possible for many parents to escape the obligations that are theirs by right and to a large extent are considered so by law. Organized society has made it possible for many parents to evade their duties in raising their children.

Society is trying to improve its methods of educating and caring for its individuals, but it is not responsible for the minds and the emotions put into them by nature. It voluntarily does its share, but if the individuals got into trouble, society has not neglected its duty.

Statistics on deer slain in New York during the season indicate that hunters guessed right in 7,888 cases.

It isn't the law that makes people decent but the decency of people that makes the law.

It is true that even the angriest teeth than a night.

Echoes of The Past

By Louise White Watson

Does Nature Change?

Who could advise us on this question better than Echo? So we called her on the telephone and before answering our query, we heard a musical laugh. Wonderingly, we again questioned, and she answered, "You surely have lived here but for a short time, or else you have lived with dulled vision and heavy hearing. Jack Frost takes his brush in hand today and from it flows all the delicate tracings of those interlaced branches overhead, making the same icy effect that he did in the earliest years. One trudges under that wonderful canopy, filled with the glory of its beauty, and even while wondering at all this marvelous beauty, the snow begins softly falling, giving you a now-and-then salute as though pleased with your silent admiration. It drops so softly, the etching is now even more effective, and before turning homeward one 'takes with fore-head bare The benediction of the air.' No old-time sketch of Nature when in her softer moods, can eclipse the treasures she unfolds to us today."

The New Year

Then, in the home-light, one looks out across the bare meadows and knows that when the summer comes there will be a gorgeous repetition of the wealth of another day. It is man alone changes. His customs are somewhat modified, whether for the best, or through a slightly growing indifference, who knows? The mid-day meeting of Friends, are they as regularly attended as in those early days when, undaunted by the elements, one went forth to worship, or at least to give a portion of the day to the One who had given him his all. The hay was cut, cured, ready for hauling into the waiting mow. The doors of the old meeting house beckon. John, the man, comes to the master of the household, "It will rain today and that hay just ready to come in, will be spoiled." Not a moment of hesitancy did the master show as he replied, "Harness the horse and we will all go to meeting."

Questioning

Then, in later years, came questionings. "Was that a wise procedure?" The hay was spoiled, the growth and labor cast aside for one hour of worship. Might not man have lifted up his heart out there in the open, lifted his thoughts high to heaven, praising God for His manifold blessings, at the same time protecting that which was evidently God-given? Who knows? Even Echo, when cornered, goes tantalizingly off into the distance, sending back another of those laughs of hers. Are they taunting, or is it simply her mode of defence, when unable to assure man with the positiveness he demands? Again, who knows? One does know she, too, never changes. She is just as fittingly graceful as she was when you and I stood there and called to her across the distance and trembled with joy when she came from behind the somewhere and gave us ringing answer. Some claim the life of the man who conformed strictly to the rulings marked out for him by those of an earlier date, was a narrow and circumscribed life, but they admit the boy's life on the farm in those off-gone days when Father seemed unnecessarily strict in imposing duties on the coming generation, the same as had been handed down to him and to his father before him.

gained in having a body hardened by years of pure air and active but not excessive exercise. And another answered, "But life set forth like that, crowds out all individuality. It is like a sucked orange." That last expression calls to one the story by Kate Douglas Wiggin. You recall where Patsy, the little cripple begging for admission to her little school, dragged something forth from his ragged pocket and offering it to her most magnanimously said, "Here's an orange, Miss Kate. It's been squashed but I guess there's something more in it." One realizes the gifts, too, have not changed in these days of considered progression, for are not many of them proffered to another, being "squashed some?" Even "Andy," when contemplating the gifts he was going to bestow on his friends at Christmas, shook his head, then decided to keep the suspenders he had bought, and substitute an inferior pair for his friend.

The Apples Fall

No change there, no matter how many years have rushed by since the earliest apple-producing tree. The ground waits just as patiently, and at times, just as exultantly (knowing the boys and girls will be drawn there as if by magic) as it ever did. True, the trees at times, after a dash of this and that, called spraying, look for all the world as tho' they were covered with a mist straight from fairy-land, and even then, the farmer shakes his head, declaring "a perfect apple now-a-days is something of a novelty. I've sprayed that orchard five times this year, costing me, well, I just can't tell what, off-handed, but considerable, I assure you." Now if any one dares venture to disclose the whereabouts of all these destructive insects, blights, etc., well, there is a prize waiting for him, that is if he can, as did the Pied Piper, cause them all to go galloping off to utter destruction, and the prize will outstrip that of the Nobel gift.

Who said, "The world has progressed so rapidly, has gone into every nook and crevice of invention that there is nothing left to invent?" Why not start in on that which awaits you, right at your doorstep, almost derisively declaring you're beaten, even before you start?

Again—

Does Christmas ever change? Are not the children of today just as joyously anticipating the glad coming of the day as they were off yonder? Do not the chimes ring out as joyously as did their hearts, exultant in knowing they had been blessed and had the peace and comfort of knowing there was the wherewithal in the home for the winter? Do they not reach out today to one less favored than they, as they did in those long-ago days when the backpacks were packed and off in that capacious sleigh to a neighbor who "had a streak of bad luck?" The New Year doesn't intrude until every sacred joy of the Holy Day has softened the heart, every head been bowed in a prayer of thanksgiving, and then, proudly he enters just as he did in the early pioneer days. Is he not the forerunner of greater benefits? All just the same.

In the preliminary game the No-Names reserves edged out the Catholic Boys' second in an extra period 37-35.

Hauptmann Goes On Trial For Kidnaped Baby's Murder

was idolized by the world after his epic non-stop flight from New York to Paris seven and a half years ago. Colonel Lindbergh in his every stare at the prisoner in the dock, will show he believed Hauptmann to be guilty; that he is indeed the man who on the night of March 1st, 1932, scaled a ladder at the Lindbergh home in Hopewell, N. J., seized the baby from his crib spirited it away and subsequently murdered the 20 months old infant. Lindbergh himself will take the witness stand during the trial and relate the events of the night of the crime; the harrowing days which followed and how weeks later, accompanied by an intermediary he went at night to a cemetery in the Bronx, N. Y., and paid $50,000 in ransom money.

The fact that $14,596 of this ransom money was found in Hauptmann's rooms after his arrest is perhaps the most convincing and incriminating evidence which the prisoner must combat.

Colonel Lindbergh's presence in Court will be the presence of Hauptmann's wife, Annie, who plans to be there every day giving long range aid and comfort to her husband whom she has loyally stood by through it all. Mrs. Hauptmann is the prisoner's staunchest defender. She insists he is innocent.

Forges Links in Chain Against Hauptmann

Albert S. Osborn (center), handwriting expert, will be one of the prosecution's most important witnesses against Bruno Hauptmann. He first pointed out the similarity of the script of the ransom notes (above) and Hauptmann's automobile license applications (below). The misplaced "h" in the word "right" in ransom note and in "light" in the application and the odd shaped "x" (as shown on right) in both are particularly incriminating. Osborn said that in his long experience he had never before seen an "x" so written.
